

Is it right for Christians to celebrate Valentine's Day—the so-called “day of love”?

According to historical records, Valentine (or Valentinus) was a Catholic priest who lived in Rome during the 3rd century under the rule of Emperor Claudius II. This emperor, a pagan, enacted strict laws that prohibited Christians from practicing their faith freely. At one point, Claudius declared that all Roman soldiers should remain unmarried, believing that single men made better warriors—more focused and loyal to their duties.

Valentine, however, defied this imperial decree. Moved by compassion and conviction, he secretly performed Christian wedding ceremonies for soldiers. When his actions were discovered, he was arrested and sentenced to death.

While in prison, it is said that Valentine developed a close relationship with the blind daughter of the prison warden. According to legend, he prayed for her, and she miraculously regained her sight. On the day of his execution—February 14, 270 A.D.—he supposedly wrote her a farewell letter signed, “From your Valentine.”

Years later, this story inspired a cultural tradition where people exchange romantic cards and gifts on February 14th in the spirit of “Valentine’s love.” But what does this narrative have to do with Christianity or biblical faith? Very little, if anything.

There is no spiritual value in celebrating a man merely for sending a romantic note before his death. The narrative—while emotionally appealing—is not grounded in Scripture and has no eternal relevance. It is one of many man-made traditions that divert attention from true, godly love and feed worldly passions and immoral festivities.

What Is the True Day of Love for Believers?

True love is not reserved for a single day. For Christians, love is a lifestyle—expressed daily, unconditionally, and sacrificially. Genuine love is not driven by emotion or sensuality but by the Spirit of Christ who laid down His life for us. (1 John 4:7-10; John 15:13)

Valentine’s Day, on the other hand, has become a day globally associated with parties, drunkenness, immorality, and sensuality—things that the Bible clearly warns us against.

1 Peter 4:3 (NIV)

“For you have spent enough time in the past doing what pagans choose to do—living in debauchery, lust, drunkenness, orgies, carousing and detestable idolatry.”

This so-called “day of love” is now one of the most popular days for fornication, adultery, and ungodly entertainment. It’s not a day that people typically use to worship God or attend church—it’s a day the world celebrates pleasure and romantic infatuation.

So Should Christians Celebrate Valentine's Day?

The answer is no. Valentine’s Day is not a Christian holiday. It is rooted in secular tradition and increasingly promotes worldly values, not Christ-like love. It exalts emotional and physical desire over spiritual discipline and divine love.

Valentine did not die for the Church. He did not bear the sins of the world. He is not our Savior. So why would believers honor his memory with flowers, gifts, or emotional celebrations that resemble pagan rituals?

Instead of promoting “Valentine’s love,” we are called to proclaim the love of Christ—a love that saves, purifies, restores, and gives eternal life.

What Can We Learn as Believers?

1. Love is Daily, Not Annual

Biblical love doesn't require a calendar reminder. It flows every day from a heart renewed by Christ. We must reject the idea that love needs a date to be special.

2. Promote Godly Love, Not Worldly Lust

Let us raise a standard of purity, especially for the younger generation. As believers, we must teach that love is not lust. Real love protects, honors, and waits—guided by the Spirit and rooted in truth.

3. Turn Valentine's into Ministry

Instead of following worldly trends, believers can use February 14 as an opportunity to:

- Visit the sick or the lonely and show the love of Christ.
- Donate to orphans or those in need.
- Hold youth seminars or prayer gatherings about godly relationships.
- Share the gospel through cards or messages that proclaim Christ's love.

Beloved, let us not be swept away by emotional trends or cultural waves. Let us stand firm in truth, discerning every celebration through the lens of Scripture. The love we are called to walk in is not a romantic story from Rome—it is the rugged, sacrificial, holy love of Christ at the cross.

Romans 12:2

“Do not conform to the pattern of this world, but be transformed by the renewing of your mind...”

Let us fix our eyes not on Valentine, but on Jesus, the true author of love.

May the Lord help us live in His love daily. Amen.
