One of the things that constantly stirred David to praise God without growing weary was his habit of meditating on God’s greatness wherever he was. David often looked up at the heavens, observing how the stars and the moon were placed so wonderfully and mysteriously in the sky—works of God’s fingers.

There is a unique joy and awe that enters the heart when one takes time to meditate on the works of God, especially His creation—the skies, mountains, valleys, rivers, and oceans. These are not just natural wonders, but revelations of God’s majesty.

As David wrote:

> “O LORD, our Lord, how majestic is your name in all the earth! You have set your glory in the heavens… When I consider your heavens, the work of your fingers, the moon and the stars, which you have set in place…”

— Psalm 8:1, 3 (NIV)

Ancient Worship Without Technology

Sometimes we wonder: how did people like David, without access to telescopes or modern science, still give God such extravagant praise and joy? If they only saw the stars visible to the naked eye, how would they have reacted if they lived in our era—an era of advanced technology showing us galaxies, nebulae, black holes, and a universe so vast it cannot be measured?

We now know that our sun and all the stars we see are but tiny grains compared to the trillions of other celestial bodies God has made. And still, Scripture says:

> “The heavens declare the glory of God; the skies proclaim the work of his hands.”

— Psalm 19:1 (NIV)

What kind of God creates such immensity, most of which we haven’t even discovered?

Why We Must Take Time to Reflect

Let us, too, give God genuine praise—not just routine worship on Sundays, but daily reflection on His greatness. Go outside. Look at the sky. Watch a sunrise or sunset. Feel the breeze. Observe the ocean’s waves. These are divine sermons written without words, testifying to the glory of the Creator.

Without this kind of reflection, our worship risks becoming ritualistic, lacking depth and sincerity. It’s easy to worship mechanically unless we actively meditate on the wonders of God.

God’s Wisdom in Creation

Think also of the amazing variety of creatures God created—each with specific design and purpose:

Why does one animal have a long neck (like a giraffe), while another does not, yet both thrive?

Why does a centipede have many legs and a snake none—yet the snake moves swiftly?

Why does a parrot, with a bird’s beak, mimic human speech better than a monkey, which has a more human-like mouth?

Why does a snail, soft and toothless, feed on bones while a cow, strong and toothy, cannot?

These paradoxes show that speech doesn’t come from the tongue alone, and functionality doesn’t come from physical ability alone. A mute person may have a perfect tongue, yet cannot speak—because God determines function.

As Scripture reminds us:

> “But now, O LORD, you are our Father; we are the clay, and you are our potter; we are all the work of your hand.”

— Isaiah 64:8 (ESV)

This shows that design and purpose come from divine wisdom, not randomness or human logic.

It Is All by Grace

As we meditate on God’s creation and wisdom, we begin to understand that God does not depend on our strength, education, or physical abilities to lift us up. He does not need us to have two legs to walk into destiny, or a degree to qualify us for purpose.

> “‘Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit,’ says the LORD Almighty.”

— Zechariah 4:6 (NIV)

It is by His grace, not our effort.

Let All That Has Breath Praise the LORD

We are all called to praise God always for His wondrous works and His glory revealed in creation. Through this, we experience Him more intimately in our lives.

> “Praise the LORD. Praise God in his sanctuary; praise him in his mighty heavens.
>
> Praise him for his acts of power; praise him for his surpassing greatness.
>
> Praise him with the sounding of the trumpet, praise him with the harp and lyre,
>
> praise him with timbrel and dancing, praise him with the strings and pipe, > praise him with the clash of cymbals, praise him with resounding cymbals.
>
>
> Let everything that has breath praise the LORD. Praise the LORD.”

— Psalm 150:1–6 (NIV)

May the Lord Bless You!

Please share this message with others. If you’d like to receive teachings like this via email or WhatsApp, send us a message in the comments or contact us at:

+255 789 001 312

Join our WhatsApp Channel: Click here to join >> WHATSAPP

Share on:
WhatsApp