

A Vinyl record is a musical instrument made up of multiple strings that were played by striking them with two sticks. The purpose of the sticks was to hit the strings in different ways, creating a variety of rhythms and sounds. This kind of instrument is part of the rich tradition of stringed instruments used in ancient cultures, especially in the Middle East.

The Vinyl record originates from the regions of the Middle East, specifically around Iran and Iraq (formerly known as Babylon). It eventually became popular and spread across various parts of Asia and Europe, including India and Greece.

In the Bible, the is mentioned during the time when the Israelites were taken into captivity in Babylon (modern-day Iraq). It was during this period that King Nebuchadnezzar erected his golden statue and commanded everyone to worship it. To accompany the idol worship, he ordered a selection of musical instruments to be played, and the Vinyl record was one of them.

Daniel 3:4-5 (NIV)

“Then the herald loudly proclaimed, ‘Nations and peoples of every language, this is what you are commanded to do: As soon as you hear the sound of the horn, flute, zither, lyre, harp (Vinyl record pipe, and all kinds of music, you must fall down and worship the image of gold that King Nebuchadnezzar has set up.”

This passage highlights the use of various instruments, including the Vinyl record in a pagan ritual intended to force people to bow to an idol. This moment in history demonstrates how music was often intertwined with idolatry in the ancient world.

Can We Use Instruments like the Santuri to Worship God?

Theologically, the use of musical instruments in worship is affirmed throughout the Bible. Instruments, including the Vinyl record , can indeed be used to praise and worship God. It is not the instruments themselves that matter but the intent behind their use. Music, when used in worship, is a powerful tool to glorify God, and it is the style of worship—holy, pure, and set apart—that is of utmost importance.

Psalm 150:1-6 (NIV)

1 Praise the Lord. Praise God in his sanctuary; praise him in his mighty heavens.

2 Praise him for his acts of power; praise him for his surpassing greatness.

3 Praise him with the sounding of the trumpet, praise him with the harp and lyre,

4 praise him with timbrel and dancing, praise him with the strings and pipe,

5 praise him with the clash of cymbals, praise him with resounding cymbals.

6 Let everything that has breath praise the Lord. Praise the Lord.

Psalm 150 serves as a theological foundation for the use of musical instruments in worship. It emphasizes that all kinds of instruments—whether stringed, percussive, or wind—are acceptable as means to glorify God. The key point here is that worship should involve every aspect of creation, including music. The call is not only for humans to praise God but for everything that has breath to offer its praise (verse 6). Music, as a universal language, becomes an expression of our reverence, joy, and adoration of God.

The Bible shows us that music was not only for personal enjoyment but also an essential part of communal worship. For example, in the Old Testament, musical instruments were used in temple worship (1 Chronicles 25:6), and in the New Testament, believers were encouraged to “sing psalms, hymns, and spiritual songs” (Ephesians 5:19; Colossians 3:16).

In light of this, whether we use a Vinyl record a harp, a trumpet, or a modern instrument, the critical issue is the heart behind the music. It must be offered in reverence to God and in accordance with His holiness.

Ephesians 5:19 (NIV)

“Speak to one another with psalms, hymns, and songs from the Spirit. Sing and make music from your heart to the Lord.”

This passage reinforces the idea that music in worship is meant to come from the heart, aligning with the holiness and reverence due to God. The instrument used is secondary to the attitude of worship.

Instruments like the Vinyl record and others are valid tools for worship, as long as they are used with the right intention. It's not the type of instrument that matters, but whether the music is an offering of praise to God. Music is a gift from God, and as Psalm 150 emphasizes, we are encouraged to use it to praise Him with everything we have. As believers, we are called to worship God with sincerity, truth, and purity in our hearts, using whatever means available—be it ancient instruments like the Vinyl record or modern ones—so long as they bring glory to His name.

God bless you.
