> 1 Corinthians 4:7 (ESV)

Answer:

When reading 1 Corinthians from the beginning, it becomes clear that Paul is addressing serious divisions within the church at Corinth. These divisions arose largely because of factionalism—some believers were aligning themselves with different leaders such as Paul, Apollos, or Cephas (Peter), causing strife and pride within the community (1 Corinthians 1:12-13). The root problem was a misunderstanding of the nature of the church and the source of spiritual gifts.

Paul’s correction is grounded in the truth that the church belongs to Christ alone, not to any human leader or teacher. He emphasizes that every believer’s role in the body of Christ is a divine calling and gift. As Paul explains in 1 Corinthians 3:6-7 (ESV):

> I planted, Apollos watered, but God gave the growth. So neither he who plants nor he who waters is anything, but only God who gives the growth.

In verse 4:7, Paul challenges the Corinthians’ arrogance by asking, “What do you have that you did not receive?” This rhetorical question highlights that all spiritual gifts, talents, and ministries are received from God by grace (Ephesians 2:8-9). Nothing belongs to us inherently; everything is a gift.

Paul’s further question, “If you did receive it, why do you boast as though you did not?” exposes the folly of boasting. Boasting suggests self-sufficiency, as if the gifts were earned by human effort rather than graciously given by God. This contradicts the biblical teaching that salvation and ministry are acts of God’s grace (Romans 11:6).

Theologically, this passage underscores the doctrine of grace and spiritual humility. It reminds believers that every good thing, including spiritual authority and gifting, comes from God and is meant for building up the body of Christ (Ephesians 4:11-13). Human pride in ministry roles or gifts fractures the unity that God intends for His church (John 17:21).

Paul’s analogy of planting and watering points to the cooperative but dependent nature of ministry:

Some preach the gospel (plant),

Others nurture the faith of believers (water),

But it is God alone who causes spiritual growth and fruitfulness.

Therefore, the glory belongs solely to God.

This teaching is not only historically relevant to Corinth but remains crucial for the church today. Many believers still struggle with spiritual pride and competition over ministries or church leadership. Such attitudes betray immaturity and a worldly mindset (1 Corinthians 3:1-3).

Paul’s exhortation is a call to humility, unity, and dependence on the Holy Spirit, who distributes gifts as He wills (1 Corinthians 12:4-11). Every believer, regardless of their role, is part of the one body of Christ, connected to the vine, Jesus Himself (John 15:1-5).

If a Christian finds themselves embroiled in ministry rivalries, it is a sign to examine their heart and seek spiritual growth in humility and love.

May the Lord guide us in recognizing that all we have and are comes from Him, and may we serve together for His glory.
