

Uganda's political system is a multi-party democracy. The President is elected for a five-year term and can be re-elected once. The President appoints and dismisses the Prime Minister and other Ministers. The Prime Minister is the head of government and is elected by a simple majority of Members of Parliament. The Ministers are appointed by the President on the advice of the Prime Minister. The Ministers are responsible to the Parliament and can be removed by a vote of no confidence. The Parliament is the highest authority in the country and is composed of Members of Parliament elected by the people. The Parliament has the power to make laws, approve the budget, and oversee the government. The Judiciary is independent and is headed by the Chief Justice. The Judiciary has the power to interpret the law and to review the actions of the executive and the legislature. The Uganda People's Congress (UPC) is the largest political party in the country. It has won the majority of seats in the Parliament in the 2016 general elections. The UPC is led by the Prime Minister, Rt Hon. Amama Mbabazi. The UPC has a long history of political participation in Uganda. It was the first political party to be registered in the country in 1985. It has been the ruling party in Uganda since 1995.
